#SHEcURITY-INDEX - Methodology

Data collection

This year's Index is the result of intense data collection over 24 months. Data has been provided by national and international authorities and in select cases by the European Parliament Research Service. We contacted all permanent representations and missions to the EU as well as local embassies in Belgium. Additionally, we reached out to national institutions, ministries of foreign affairs, ministries of defence, and various national security authorities. In those cases where data was difficult to access, we also reached out to the EU delegations in respective countries. The European Parliamentary Research Service provided updated data on EU institutions, as well as in select cases for the EU and G20 countries. We complemented the database as far as possible through additional desk research, based on information publicly available, evaluating other existing indices, databases, platforms, and official online sources, such as national parliamentary webpages. Lastly, we reached out to international organisations and institutions such as NATO, UN Women, or the Inter-Parliamentary Union. External data is explicitly indicated and referenced throughout the Index.

In addition to including a broader selection of countries, we focused on including absolute numbers to showcase precise percentage points. In select cases, last year's Index data may have changed slightly by percentage points in this update. However, 2020 was used as the main point of reference in data collection for this year's analysis. In the case of parliamentary committees, only 2021 data was accessible. This data might, however, still be subject to change and only represents a snapshot in time.

There are particular cases where countries do not have a certain position or institution. To distinguish them in the Index, those are marked with a dash (-). When no data was available or provided, the specific cell is left blank. Considering that contact had already been established with several countries in the previous year's data collection, we have made two observations: (1) some embassies already started to collect data and knew how and where to easily request it from; (2) others failed to provide updates because data had not yet been collected due to various reasons (COVID-19, different priorities, lack of staff and time, unavailability/inaccessibility of data).

Scope and Structure

To render this edition of the #SHEcURITY Index more comprehensive, we expanded its scope in two regards. First, the data from last year's edition has been updated with new data from 2020 and, in some cases, 2021. Where possible, we filled data gaps compared to last year's edition and refined data in select cases. Second, beyond EU/G20 member states, we have screened data for all countries that have released a NAP on the implementation of the WPS agenda.

The #SHEcURITY Index is again divided into six areas of analysis:

- Politics: % of women in European Parliament, national parliaments, national foreign and defence committees (if not unicameral then from lower chambers) and women serving as foreign and defence ministers
- Diplomacy: % of women serving as ambassadors, in the national diplomatic service, ministry of foreign affairs staff and the European External Action Service (EEAS)
- Military: % of women in national armed forces
- Police: % of women in national police forces
- International missions: % of women in UN peacekeeping missions, as head and deputy-heads of missions and in Common Security and Defence Policy (CSDP) missions
- Thinking security: % of women's representation in the boards of EU and U.S. security and foreign policy think tanks

To establish the #SHEcURITY Index for a given area of analysis, available data is factored in equally, without weighting a region or country by size or other factors. For the EU/G20 member states that were already included in the Index last year, we added the data for 2020 and filled data gaps for previous years wherever possible, in each key area and respective sub-section. For the 60 newly added WPS NAP countries, we gathered annual data from 2000-2020/2021, again for each key area and respective sub-section.

Limitations

The biggest challenge continues to be a severe lack, non-availability or non-accessibility of data. Some areas of analysis continue to be better documented than others. Public accountability in the political realm might be a contributing factor. Data on political representation, for example, is in most cases easily accessible via public sources. Thus, we could rely on official public sources in cases where the institutions contacted did not provide data. Other areas, however, severely fail to document and/or provide data, particularly in the areas of diplomacy, military, and police. This limitation needs to be considered when looking at the tables and data of the #SHEcURITY Index. This data gap creates further limitations in the use of the Index: regional averages are inconsistent or not as reliable where there are severe data gaps because the average calculation is based on data for only a few countries, in some cases even only one. We, therefore, refer to regional averages in the analysis only in cases where they are reliable and based on a larger set of data.
