#SHEcurity-INDEX - Methodology

Data collection

The 2022 edition of the #SHEcurity Index is result of the data collection process over the last three years. Majority of data has been provided by the embassies, missions, and representations of national governments in Brussels, international organisations, and institutions (including the Inter-Parliamentary Union, the United Nations, the EU institutions, and North Atlantic Treaty Organisation). Additionally, this year the #SHEcurity Index has greatly profited from the tremendous support of the European Union's External Action Service who supplied data via its Delegations from across the world. The European Parliament Research Service provided data for the EU institutions, as well as in certain cases for the EU and G20 countries.

Wherever needed and possible, we complemented data with additional desk research, based on official publicly available information and data, analysing other databases and indices, platforms and websites of respective institutions and national parliaments. Data provided by external sources is referenced and indicated accordingly within the #SHEcurity Index database. In certain cases, last years' Index data may have changed slightly by percentage points due to additional data or interpretations being provided by the national governments. It is important to mention, that in the cases where data of respective analysis area or country is provided by different sources, the #SHEcurity Index prioritises data provided by national governments, which are considered to have the direct access to the most up-to-date statistics.

There are some cases where countries do not have a certain institution of position (such as defence ministers, defence committees or national armed forces). In those cases, such cells are marked with a dash (-) in the Index, to distinguish it from empty cells, which indicate that data was not available or provided.

Overall, the data collection process for the #SHEcurity Index 2022 edition has been a considerable team effort if not a global effort to ensure the most comprehensive overview of the women's representation in security and foreign policy. All in all, the observations during this year of data collection remain like those of the previous year: (1) more national governments were able to ensure a timely data collection, including that for 2021 as well as for the missing years (in most cases due to the support of the EEAS and the EU Delegations); (2) certain governments continue to fail to collect and provide data due to various reasons (lack

Scope and Structure

In the 2022 edition of the #SHEcurity Index, we have decided not to expand the scope but rather focus on providing data for 2021, as well as filling in the gaps for the missing countries and years from previous editions. As mentioned above, there were additionally three countries added to the database, which have released WPS NAPs during 2021 respectively. Following this, the #SHEcurity Index keeps focusing on six areas in its analysis:

- Politics: % of women in national parliaments, the European Parliament, respective foreign policy, and defence committees (if not unicameral than from lower chambers), as well as representation of women among foreign affairs and defence ministers
- Diplomacy: % of women among national and European Union's ambassadors, as well as staff members within the ministries of foreign affairs and the European External Action Service (EEAS). Data on 'diplomatic corps' was deleted from the diplomacy section due to misinterpretation of this category by different institutions.
- Military: % of women in national armed forces
- Police: % of women in national police forces
- International Missions: % of women among the leadership staff in the UN peacekeeping missions, mainly heads and deputy-heads of the missions, as well as those within EU's Common Security and Defence Policy (CSDP) military and civilian missions
- Arms Manufacturers: % of women in the boards of Arms Manufacturers in Germany, France, the United Kingdom, and the United States. This section was integrated in 2020, and is again mentioned this year due to the support of the AllBright Foundation.

In order to provide a comprehensive global overview of the dataset for a given area of analysis, the provided data is presented equally without weighting region or country by size or any other factors. For the EU, G20 and WPS NAP countries from the 2020 edition, we included the data for the year 2021 as well as filled the gaps wherever possible for the remaining 2000-2020 years. For three newly added countries, we

Limitations

Similarly to the previous editions, the key challenge for the #SHEcurity Index is a considerable lack of data. Thus, certain areas within the Index are more complete than others. Considering public accountability, the areas from the political realm prove to be more complete than other areas. Consequently, data for the political realm was mostly provided through publicly available sources. Correspondingly, the area with the majority of data gaps is in the areas of diplomacy, military, and police. Therefore, when reading the Index, this should be considered as missing data contributes to the limitations in reading the Index. Particularly, there are limitations in calculating regional averages where data for a considerable number of countries is not provided. Consequently, regional averages are not provided in the areas where we observed that
